

Councils seem to want to delay housing development related to new metro rail yet this is clearly where new growth should occur.

It is the state government that funds the new metro rail network across Sydney yet it seems that each local council can frustrate the development that must come with the new infrastructure. It is also surprising that the state government has not promoted as much new housing around the north shore stations along the same metro rail. All stations must do their bit to have more people able to walk to the new public transport infrastructure.

Chris Johnson
CEO Urban Taskforce